The petitioner herein is involved as accused in twelve cases. Now he wants to surrender before the learned Magistrate. His apprehension is that the learned Magistrate will insist on production of different sets of sureties. The legal position is covered by a decision of this Court. What is important is not the number of sureties, but their solvency to the extent fixed by the trial court for bond in all the cases. The petitioner can very well surrender before the learned Magistrate, place the decision of this Court before the learned Magistrate, and if the two sureties are really solvent to the extent of the bond imposed by the learned Magistrate in the twelve cases, he will be released on the bond of those sureties.

With these observations, this Original Petition is closed.
