DAMA SESHADRI NAIDU, J.

W.P.(c) No. 7466 of 2013

Dated this the 02nd day of November, 2015

JUDGMENT

The learned counsel for the petitioner submits that the writ petition has become infructuous. Accordingly, the writ petition is dismissed as infructuous.

2. The learned counsel has represented that liberty may be given to the petitioner to take advantage of the judgment to be rendered by the Honourable Supreme Court before which similar matters are pending.

Needless to observe that, if the Honourable Supreme Court has to render a judgment, in terms of Article 141 of the Constitution, that being the law of the land, nothing prevents the petitioner from taking advantage of the judicial dispensation by the Honourable Supreme Court.
