K. KANNAN J. (ORAL)

1. At the time of trial, a copy of document without setting out the correctness of the document was confronted to a party for identifying the signature. There was an objection taken by the present petitioner. The objection was overruled. The issue of whether the objection was taken or not taken obtains little significance if the party to whom the document is confronted denies the same. If the document is denied, there was no way the document could be admitted into evidence. The matter must end there. The petitioner need not treat himself as aggrieved to file a revision petition.

2. The revision petition is disposed of with the above observations.
