

involves the compensation payable to the claimants under the Employees Companies Act, 1923. It is possible that on account of pendency of this matter, the claimants have been deprived of the compensation awarded to them.

4 In the aforesaid circumstances, no further indulgence can be given to the appellant. The appeal is consequently dismissed for non-prosecution. The Civil Application for stay does not survive and the same is also disposed of. Ad-interim order, if any, stands vacated.

5 The Workmen Compensation Commissioner to pay the amount of compensation, if deposited with it, to the claimants unconditionally along with interest, if any, that may have accrued upon the same.
