1. After arguments, these petitions are not pressed but liberty is granted to the petitioner to file a civil suit in a civil court, and of course this liberty does not mean liberty is granted by this Court that the civil court will necessarily entertain the suit upto trial, and all the defences of facts and law will be open to the respondent when the civil suit is filed to urge that the suit is not maintainable at the threshold, if the law so provides.

2. The petitions are disposed of accordingly.
