2. Notice sent to the other side and caveator appeared.

3. The learned counsel for the petitioners submits that the respondent / wife of the first petitioner herein is drag on the proceedings near about more than one year, without any progress after cross examination of RW1. The first revision petitioner, who is the husband always inclined to cooperate for the proceedings, but the same was dragged on by the wife by filing multiplicity of applications. Hence, he prayed to dispose of the case as early as possible.

4. The learned counsel for the respondent submits that the first petitioner herein not complied with the order passed in MC proceedings and near about more than Rs.11 lakhs is arrear as interim maintenance, but one way or other evaded to pay interim maintenance. The wife is living with child and he only dragged the proceedings. The learned counsel for the petitioners submits that he is taking steps to challenge the order.

5. But on seeing the fact that MC was filed in the year 2012 and so far, proceedings not came to end. But between parties, MC proceedings and DVC proceedings filed long back and she is living with the child and so far entire proceedings not came to end. However, trial has begun and now case is
