No one appears on behalf of the State.

However, for some time now the private respondents had been harassing, intimidating and annoying the petitioner. She had been threatened over telephone. The petitioner lodged complaints before the police authorities, but no FIR was registered. She seeks police protection and registration of an FIR on her complaints.

Learned counsel appearing on behalf the private respondents submits as follows. For quite sometime the petitioner and the private respondent no.6 are staying separately. A divorce suit is pending between the private respondent no.6 and her husband. In spite of this the petitioner had been sending annoying and defamatory letters to the private respondent no.6 all these long. It does not appear from the complaints that a cognizable offence is made out so as to register an FIR.
