PER COURT:-

This Court has gone through the ratio laid down in these cases and expressed the opinion that the Court is not satisfied that the points not raised in the earlier bail application is change in circumstances. He is right in arguing that there is no bar to file successive bail applications. However that requires a change in circumstance. As far as not passing the order on appreciating the fact by the criminal Court is also not a change in circumstance. It is in the form of review. The criminal law does not have powers to review its own order.
