Vs.

Family Court by the husband for setting aside the interim maintenance order by consent. He submits that, the applicant-wife had given no objection for setting aside the order of interim maintenance.

3. Learned counsel for the husband has placed on record, the copy of an application at Exhibit-48A filed in the Family Court. The same is taken on record.

4. Learned counsel for the applicant-wife submits that the applicant has no objection for grant of divorce. She submits that the applicant-wife has already submitted before the Family Court that she was working and therefore, she does not want maintenance. However, she submits that the respondent should agree for dissolution of marriage.

5. Learned counsel for the respondent husband submits that the husband has filed an application for restitution of conjugal rights, and the wife has applied for divorce. Learned counsel for the husband submits that Family Court has granted restitution of conjugal rights and dismissed the petition of divorce filed by the wife. Both the Family Court Appeals filed by the wife are pending before this Court.

6. Considering the rival submissions made above, I find it appropriate that the parties should explore possibility of some amicable solution. To enable the parties to make an attempt to amicably settle the dispute and arrive at some solution, let the parties remain present before the Court on the next date, either physically or on V.C.

7. List the interim application on 31st July 2024. To be listed under the caption “for directions”.
