CORAM : AMIT BORKAR, J.

DATED : AUGUST 25, 2025

P.C.:

1. At the very outset, it is noticed that at the inception of both these bail applications, the Vakalatnamas have been signed by the applicant himself. This factual position is not disputed by either side. What further emerges is that both these bail applications have been filed simultaneously and are pending consideration at the same time at the instance of the same applicant. Such a situation, in the considered view of this Court, renders the applications defective at the threshold. It is a settled principle that multiplicity of bail applications in respect of the same crime and at the instance of the same accused is impermissible, as it creates a possibility of conflicting orders and amounts to abuse of the process of law. The applicant cannot be permitted to maintain parallel proceedings before the Court, particularly when the defect lies at the very foundation of the applications.

2. In this backdrop, since both bail applications suffer from this fundamental defect, this Court is left with no option but to hold that they are not maintainable. Consequently, the Court is not inclined to examine or enter into the merits of the case at this stage. Once the very maintainability of the applications is in doubt, the merits of the matter cannot be gone into, lest it should result in an incongruous situation.

3. In view of the above discussion and the disposal of the main bail applications on the ground of non-maintainability, it necessarily follows that the interim applications taken out therein also cannot survive for consideration. Hence, the interim applications stand disposed of accordingly.
