2. The respondent/husband filed a divorce petition in HMOP.No.1723 of 2023. He filed application seeking leave of the court to produce certain additional documents. In the affidavit filed in support of the said application, it was stated that five documents described in the affidavit were not produced at the time of filing of OP and he procured the documents only now after elaborate search. The family court was pleased to allow the said application. Aggrieved by the same, the petitioner/wife has come before this court.

3. The learned counsel for the petitioner submitted that the documents produced by the respondent are not relevant to the main issue involved in the OP. Therefore, the Family Court ought not have allowed the application.

4. The respondent filed an application to produce additional documents which were not produced along with this pleadings. By impugned order, the trial court allowed the respondent to produce the documents. The relevancy of the document cannot be decided at this stage. When the respondent attempt to mark the additional documents, the petitioner has liberty to object to the marking by raising objections. Even then, the documents can be marked subject to the relevancy and proof and usefulness of the document can be
